Synopsis: Elena Morandi has only her fieldwork left to complete her degree in anthropology. Her topic: how the ancient cult of Diana and its practices influenced the social structure and culture of the Roman people. She takes the summer to work under the supervision of a local history specialist, Professor Riccardo Benenati. She also adds to her knowledge by helping the well-respected archaeologist Doctor Vincenzo Nerezza, who is working on a dig at the famous Temple of Diana on the northeastern shore of Lake Nemi.

Elena discovers a secret tunnel under the Nemi cliffs and a way back in time to Nemi's ancient sylvan woods. Between keeping in touch with her husband Leo back in Portland, her work with the professor and archaeologist, and her visits to the ancient cult of Diana's priestesses, she is also trying to figure out who is stealing temple antiquities. She doesn't know who she can trust, but she ends up learning a lot more about human behavior and an ancient culture than she ever expected.

Synopsis: In this third volume of The Inspector Reynard Series, Chante, Lucien and Gervais Reynard decide to take a holiday and follow the only clue they have concerning the secret they discovered in Mystras, Greece. All they know is that when Lord Cantacouzenos died in 1380, his wife Isabelle Lusignan, who they know had the secret, left for Cyprus to rejoin the Lusignan family. Where did she go on Cyprus, to whom did she tell the secret before she died, and how did it find its way back to Greece? Lucien realizes that Cyprus is well-known for antiquities smuggling, and as an experienced police inspector who specializes in the recovery of art and antiquities, he decides to offer his services to the director of UNESCO on the island. The Reynards are asked to pose as tourists and are assigned Aleixo, a part-time agent who acts as their driver and interpreter. They tour the island's archaeological sites and museums, searching for lost items and leads on smugglers. While the Reynards become educated on the history, culture and politics of Cyprus, Aleixo brings them a lead about a possible smuggling operation. The more they learn, the more danger ensues, causing the Reynards to rethink their plan. The Cypriot police and UNESCO agents are eventually drawn in to the investigation. As a result of the Reynards indomitable desire to uncover the secrets of the past, they discover the answer to a long-standing mystery on Cyprus, which in turn leads them to Italy, and then to Malta, where the most surprising answers come from an unexpected source.

Synopsis: In this second volume of The Inspector Reynard Series, Chante and Lucien are about to celebrate their second wedding anniversary when Lucien's father, Gervais, a well-known European historian, and Chante, his full-time research assistant, are hired to identify a Byzantine princess whose tomb has been discovered in the ancient Greek city of Mystras. Lucien, now an inspector who investigates art and antiquities smuggling, goes along to help. While Chante and Gervais dig through historical files and old chronicles to answer the mystery of the princess' identity, Lucien entertains himself by reading a Venetian detective's diary about a nun who was murdered in Mystras in 1715. Caught up in the story of that investigation, Lucien discovers there is more to the tale than just murder, for clues found within the narrative lead all three of them on another surprising historical search. When they finally decide to follow the biblical stories illustrated on the frescoed walls of an ancient Greek Orthodox church, they discover a secret that could change the world's understanding of one of the most significant religious stories of all time.

Synopsis: Two stories come together in one book about a family of Roma Travelers set in Romania in 1871.

Part One, “The Heart of Romani Pearl” is a romance between a young girl named Pearl who travels in a vardo wagon with her family. She meets Garridan who lives in the ancient Hoia Baci Forest of northwestern Romania. He shows her many wonders, and before they know it, love comes to the fore and they become trapped in the forest. Together, they must deal with a mysterious overlord, Spiridon Ardelean, who has complete control over all souls living and dead, and his overseer Varujan who does his best to do the lord’s bidding. There is only one way to break the spell and escape the forest, but it cannot be achieved without the talents of Pearl’s family, a precise number of local townspeople, and the strength of Pearl and Garridan’s love.

Part Two, “The Soul of Garridan Searle” begins after they are set free. It tells of Garridan’s exceptional talents as a wood carver. Garridan makes a new sign for a cobbler in the next village. This starts a slew of new carving in the town. In the evenings, he is called by spirits to visit their elemental domains. The Zânespirits seek to lure him, but Garridan is able to capture their power into the wood he carves. Each carving brings a spirit’s gift to one who needs it, and harm to those who don’t. The mayor, the miller, the fisherman, and the blacksmith have one thing in common, a two-faced gift. A plea is sent for help and four sacred dancers heed the call to work their magic. A heart-warming story about Romanian culture, a secret carried by Pearl’s family, and how the town rewards them all.

Synopsis: In 1890, Amelia and her brother William are informed that their estranged father has died, and they have inherited his home in England's North York Moors. William escorts Amelia and her son Rowland from London to the house, only to find many unanswered questions. Why had their father left London without telling them? How had he come into possession of the house? Why were several of the rooms left untouched by not only their father, but the previous owner? Why does their father's grave have a strange epitaph? What are the strange lights in the forest at night? Who is willing to tell them what really happened to their father? Despite these curiosities, Amelia enrolls Rowland in the local primary and they meet the headmaster Giles Arden, Rowland's teacher Beth Cagar, and her daughter Tess. Each befriends the family in their own way. Tess seems to have a magical way with animals, and Rowland wants the same power. Beth says she can help him, but Rowland senses that something is not quite right. The townspeople know what happened ten years ago, but only a few of those, who did ritual within the stone circle, know about the curse and its devastating effects. It takes William's discovery of a hidden diary, Amelia's blossoming affection for Giles, and a curious Rowland, to discover the truth.

Poetic Emanations of Light, Life, Love & Liberty

Publisher: Templar Media

Publication Date: August 8, 2018

Formats available: Paperback & Kindle

ISBN-13: 978-0996627245

Synopsis: In this second collection of poetry, Lita-Luise Chappell explores the themes of light, life, love and liberty, inspired by Aleister Crowley's description of his Thelemic laws. There is the light without from the sun and the moon, how the ancient people worshiped it, and created ways in which that light could reach further. Humankind has replicated this light with fire and has harnessed it for cooking food, and produced light for heating the body and habitable spaces. There is the life of nature and her seasons, of plant, and animal, along with the life of human existence with the family from birth to the end of life. There is poetry that delves into all the manifestations of love, as the Greeks characterized it. And finally, there are the variations of what liberty is and can be, from natural and civic to economic, political, and national liberties. Thus, are these four emanations presented in poetic verse.
